Weather of Concern

- A strong front will bring gusty south winds and moderate to heavy rain to northwest California. Current timing shows it starting Thursday afternoon in the north and spreading across the area Thursday night. Showers will persist behind the front on Friday.
- Potential for rapid rises on Northern California rivers, but river flooding is not expected

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

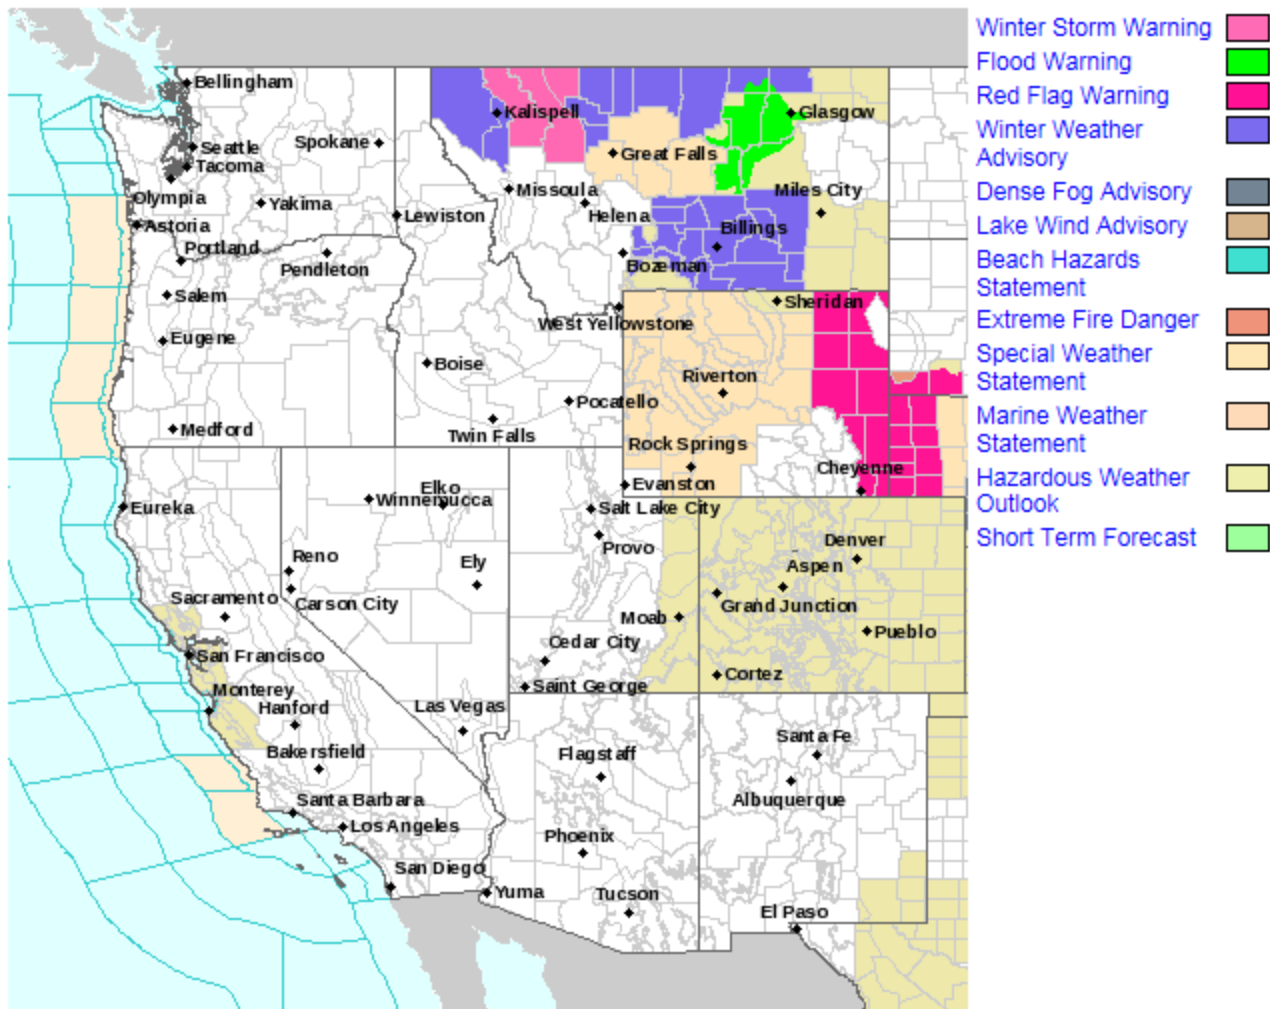

Southwest Wind Gusts 25-30 mph East of the Cascade-Sierra Crest This Afternoon

Dry and warmer than normal weather can be expected throughout Northern California through Tuesday. Light night and morning downslope/down-valley winds west of the Cascade-Sierra Crest will end by the middle of each day, and turn light upslope/up-valley each afternoon. Southwest gusts will reach 25-30 mph in wind-prone areas for a few hours, this afternoon. High pressure passing overhead on Tuesday will produce light winds with continuing mild and dry conditions. The high pressure will move off to the east on Wednesday as a Pacific trough approaches the coast. Wednesday will be breezy with increasing clouds and cooler temperatures. Light rain showers will move onshore early on Thursday and spread across Northern California late in the day and Thursday night. Heavier rain will reach the coast late Thursday and spread to all areas by late Friday. Moderate to heavy precipitation will continue on and off, with periods of strong gusty south to west winds, through midday Tuesday. Snow levels will start out around 6000-7000 feet and drop to around 5000 feet on Monday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will cool around 5 degrees both today and Tuesday as a weak trough approaches and moves inland over the West Coast. Future weak troughs will then maintain near to a little below normal temperatures Wednesday through next weekend. Minimum humidity will increase to 12% to 25% today and then be between 20% and 40% Tuesday through next weekend. Westerly afternoon and evening winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the desert passes today through next weekend. The marine layer will deepen and morning low clouds and fog will make it into the coastal valleys by Tuesday.
